Tucker Plumlee is a senior research associate at the Center for Regional Economic Competitiveness (CREC) where he helps coordinate the Projections Managing Partnership and leads data-intensive workforce and economic development research projects. Prior to CREC he was a research analyst, then associate director of labor market intelligence, at Northern Virginia Community College (NOVA). Throughout his 8+ years in the field, he has maintained a motivating interest in utilizing and communicating insights from public data, particularly through the mediums of visualization and storytelling.